Frederick City Abattoir Company
809 E. South Street
Frederick (Frederick County), Maryland
Ca. 1910
Access: Private

The Frederick City Abattoir Company, most recently known as Frederick County Products, Incorporated, is a c.1910 brick industrial building complex situated on the southeastern edge of Frederick City. Fronting onto the east side of E. South St. and the B&O Railroad, the area is dominated by industrial activity and heavy truck traffic. This livestock slaughter house and packaging building complex was historically located outside of the city limits in an effort to separate its unpleasant odors from commercial and residential areas. The now antiquated industrial buildings sit surrounded by modern quarry operations, the railroad and interstate highway.

The Frederick City Abattoir Company represents an important component of the agricultural economy of Frederick County (National Register Criterion A). Much of Frederick City's industry through the 18th ,19th , and into the 20th century was directly related to the region's agricultural economy, with mills and tanneries the primary industries. While the processing of animal stock could be managed by individual farmers, with the coming of the B&O Railroad to Frederick in the 1830s, agricultural processing became more centralized. The Frederick City Abattoir Company was located near the railroad, but on the outskirts of the city to segregate the odor, noise, and debris of the livestock butchering and packaging complex from the city's commercial and residential center. The two-building brick complex is a good example of an early 20th century industrial complex (National Register Criterion C).

Description Summary

The Frederick City Abattoir Company, most recently known as Frederick County Products, Incorporated, is a c.1910 brick industrial building complex situated on the southeastern edge of Frederick City. Fronting onto the east side of E. South St. and the B&O Railroad, the area is dominated by industrial activity and heavy truck traffic. This livestock slaughter house and packaging building complex was historically located outside of the city limits in an effort to separate its unpleasant odors from commercial and residential areas. The now antiquated industrial buildings sit surrounded by modern quarry operations, the railroad and interstate highway.

Description

The Frederick City Abattoir Company is a brick industrial complex composed of two buildings. The larger (main) building, fronting approximately 300 feet along the east side of East South Street, is a three-story brick building with several sections of varied height. There is a loading dock of concrete on the southwest (front) elevation across the first story of the main three-story section. One bay is a wide, arched entrance, now enclosed. The dock is covered with a cantilevered hipped metal roof. Three brick towers (elevator or cooling towers) project on the roof. The exterior walls of the main building are laid with recessed sections two bays wide with stepped brick corbelling across the top, just below the roof line. The roof is flat with a raised parapet around the perimeter, capped with tile coping. Most of the windows are topped with shallow brick arches, although a number of windows appear to be added or altered, their arches removed. Most of the third story windows are infilled with concrete block. On the northwest elevation a one-story addition is constructed of cast (ashlar) concrete block, which houses a loading dock. The northwest wall of the addition has 4 vertical board sliding garage doors. The addition is dated "1937" with a cast date block. There are several block and frame one-story additions on the northeast (rear) elevation as well.

A much smaller, two-story brick building is located behind (northeast) the main building. It is a gable end construction with similar recessed sections and stepped brick corbelling. Windows are also variously arched or flat. A one-story shed addition on the northwest elevation is constructed of brick with recessed sections and appears to be contemporary with the building.

The lot on which the Frederick City Abattoir Company complex is located is mainly gravel and scruff vegetation. The exterior of the building is peeling white paint with "Frederick County Products Inc." painted in large black letters across a red painted banner on the northwest and southwest elevations near the roof line. The buildings are in fair condition but appear to be poorly maintained.

Summary of Significance

The Frederick City Abattoir Company represents an important component of the agricultural economy of Frederick County (National Register Criterion A). Much of Frederick City's industry through the 18th, 19th, and into the 20th century was directly related to the region's agricultural economy, with mills and tanneries the primary industries. While the processing of animal stock could be managed by individual farmers, with the coming of the B&O Railroad to Frederick in the 1830s, agricultural processing became more centralized. The Frederick City Abattoir Company was located near the railroad, but on the outskirts of the city to segregate the odor, noise, and debris of the livestock butchering and packaging complex from the city's commercial and residential center. The two-building brick complex is a good example of an early 20th century industrial complex (National Register Criterion C).

Historic Context

Note: For a more comprehensive historical context of agriculture in Frederick City/County, see "Thematic Historical Context – Agriculture," for the City of Frederick, Paula S. Reed & Assoc., Inc. 2003.

After the Civil War, Maryland's urbanization accelerated. Population began to shift with internal migration from the countryside to the cities. Baltimore grew, but so did cities like Cumberland, Hagerstown and, to a lesser extent, Frederick. The slowed but steady growth of the population and economic base of Frederick city during the second half of the 19th century encouraged city authorities to look toward expansion of the city limits. In 1870, the taxable limits of Frederick were extended.<sup>1</sup> The expansion encompassed a number of outlying farms that would provide the acreage necessary for residential developments in the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

Throughout the second half of the 19th century, competition from Mid-Western grain resulted in Maryland sharing a smaller percentage of the whole amount of grain produced in the U.S. Frederick County maintained its agricultural base, however, and continued among the highest producers in the state of corn and wheat. But a gradual shift in production was beginning. The value of livestock in Frederick County in the 1860 Agricultural Census showed the county leading the state.<sup>2</sup> The high value of livestock suggests the prominence of dairy beginning to emerge in the county, which had the necessary access to city markets via the B&O Railroad, the Western Maryland Railroad (1869), and the Frederick & Pennsylvania Line (1872), which connected with the Pennsylvania Railroad in Littlestown, PA.<sup>3</sup>

Frederick city's industry remained based primarily in agricultural-related products. Milling continued at Brunner's City Mill on Bentz Street and at Kemp's Steam Flouring Mills on Carroll Street, as well as a number of tanneries and fertilizer plants and lime kilns. But as the urbanization and industrialization process gradually transformed the economy of Maryland, Frederick County farmers responded by shifting to meat and dairy products, fruit, and vegetable production. The canning of vegetables, fruits, and oysters was a relatively new technology, which catered to the emerging large industrial city markets rather than the traditional local farmer's markets of fresh produce. Canning and packing companies developed in Frederick beginning in the 1860s and accelerated in the 1890s with three companies in operation on East South Street beyond Carroll Street, the Frederick City Packing Co., the Monocacy Valley Canning Co., and the Colt & Dixon Packing Co., by 1904.<sup>4</sup>

Resource History

Joining the agricultural industries of Frederick in 1910 was the Frederick City Abattoir Company. Touted as a centralized facility for stock butchering, the large complex was constructed outside the city limits, segregating its odorous and potentially unhealthful business from the commercial and residential city center. Established by Harry D. Baumgardner, the development of the abattoir was described by T.J.C. Williams in his 1910 History of Frederick County, Maryland:

Since 1888 he [Harry Baumbarder] has been engaged in the wholesale and retail oyster business as a side line, and has acquired a large trade. In 1905, he embarked in the butchering business....Mr. Baumgardner is a progressive man and has been one of the foremost workers to organize a stock company to erect an abattoir on a site about a half mile east of Frederick. Here all the butchers of Frederick would have their stock killed and the slaughtering would be done outside the town limits.<sup>5</sup>

It seems likely that the large building included refrigeration facilities for storage of meat prior to its transport to city markets via the nearby railroad.

Baumgardner's plan for the abattoir appears to have begun in 1907 with his purchase of a 22-acre site on East South Street from the M.J. Grove Lime Company.<sup>6</sup> In December 1910, Baumgardner sold the property to the Frederick City Abattoir Company for $5,000, indicating the facility may have been under construction.<sup>7</sup> In 1917, the property to a Virginia corporation known as the Old Dutch Market. Included in the sale of 22 acres was the "Abattoir plant, machinery, fittings and equipment thereon," as well as "all its brands, copy rights and trade marks, and all its rights to use the same, of and concerning all the brands and grades of goods manufactured or sold by it."<sup>8</sup>

The Old Dutch Market company became the Old Dutch Realty Development Company in 1920, and apparently developed their industrial property in Frederick. In 1927, the property was sold to Frederick County Products Incorporated for a whopping $72,500.<sup>9</sup> The Frederick County Products company apparently purchased livestock from local farmers, then slaughtered and packaged their product for sale in urban markets. The business continued operating into the 1970s, and was commonly known as the livestock auction. In 1979 the property was sold to P. Eugene and Mildred Romsburg, who owned it for 20 years.<sup>10</sup> Recently the buildings and approximately 3 acres were sold to Wolfe Family LLLP, who now operate a Flea Market in the building and lease other sections to local companies.<sup>11</sup>
